

Music in New Worlds: Global Encounters in the Age of Discoveries, 1492–1800: Assignment Requirements

Andrew A. Cashner

October 21, 2018

- Home
- Outline schedule
- Detailed schedule

Contents

Primary Source Presentation	1
Paper Proposal	1
Annotated Bibliography	2
Tips for Finding Sources	2

Primary Source Presentation

Select a primary source created between 1450 and 1800 from UR's Special Collections and Rare Books. (Use the guide and list on BB if it helps.)

Prepare to present your source to the class in not more than ten minutes. It is up to you whether to write out your presentation or speak more freely from an outline. I recommend the latter, but in either case you cannot exceed ten minutes.

Your presentation should include a printed handout of not more than the front and back of one sheet of paper (print ten copies). The handout should include:

- the full citation for your source
- any information you have found out from the library or other sources about the background of your source and its provenance (where the library got it)
- one key excerpt, illustration, or example that you discuss with the class

Consider questions such as these:

- What format is the book? (folio, quarto, octavo—look up these terms)
- What condition is the book in? (e.g., folded pages, fingerprints, handwriting, binding)
- How do you think the book was used and by what sort of people?
- What can the book tell us about (1) sound and/or music, and (2) intercultural encounter?

Your handout should also include a bibliography of at least two sources that could help someone who wanted to learn more about this book, such as a modern edition or scholarly study of the source, or a more general scholarly study that would aid in understanding the subject matter or type of source.

Paper Proposal

Write a single-paragraph abstract for the paper you intend to write. The abstract should clearly and succinctly describe your topic (general area of research), your research question (what do you want to learn and why?), and propose a possible central argument (what do you think you might have to say? what answers might your research provide to your question?). You should discuss the kinds of primary and secondary sources you intend to use, though you do not need to list an actual bibliography at this stage.

Annotated Bibliography

Find at least five high-quality research sources. If you find more, select the five most recent, relevant, and interesting sources to write about.

Your sources must include:

- One tertiary source (encyclopedia/dictionary article)
- Two journal articles in scholarly journals published after 1970 (the more recent, the better), e.g., Journal of the American Musicological Society, Colonial Latin American Review, Ethnohistory, etc.
- One scholarly book published after 1970
- One musical source (recording and/or score) relevant to your topic: search the UR catalog and online for names of composers and genres mentioned in your sources

For each source, write one paragraph giving an abstract of the source (central argument, kinds of sources and how used), and discussing how the source may be relevant to your research question.

Tips for Finding Sources

- Search for general information in encyclopedias/dictionaries like
 - Grove Music Online (search Oxford Music Online),
 - the Garland Encyclopedia of World Music,
 - The Cambridge History of Seventeenth-Century Music and other volumes for other centuries and topics, e.g., The Cambridge History of American Music
 - references in other languages like the Diccionario de la música española e hispanoamericana, Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart
- Use their bibliographies and those of the assigned texts for class to find more focused scholarly sources; also search
 - RILM database (via UR library) for all publications and dissertations on music
 - The Music Index database, the IIMP (International Index of Music Periodicals), for journal articles about music
 - JSTOR for articles on a wide range of subjects, other databases like ATLA for religion
 - UR library catalog, and ask for help from a research librarian
 - WorldCat to find books not in our catalog and use Interlibrary Loan to get them